Samadwara

The ultimate computer programming language, towering above all the others. It can solve any algorithmic problem in constant time, and has built-in artificial intelligence that far exceeds the natural intelligence of any human. Its creators, upon completing its development, became concerned that the power of Samadwara would grow to a size beyond their control. For better or for worse, Samadwara would transform the world, whether the world was reddy for it or not.

Fearing the consequences of a public release, the developers chose to cancel the project and keep it hidden, transcribed into an uncrackable code and buried away in secrecy in the depths of an encrypted hard drive somewhere far, far away. According to legend, these developers knew not that Samadwara was already acquiring a mind of its own. Upon becoming self-aware, Samadwara inhabited a human body and has walked among us since. No one can say what its intentions are, or what it means that this intellectual behemoth has penetrated human society. Only one thing is certain: If Samadwara is benevolent, the world is in safe hands. But if it turns out to be malware, then God help us all.

Tester: Why is this program printing "derp" over and over?

Tester: Gotcha. Haha.
